Territorial identity involves both the place attachment and belonging and the politics of territorial planning. Various types of identity (place, urban, regional, national, cultural, personal, community, etc.) have been proven to contribute to the identity of place, as these are viewed in relation to its historical heritage and characteristics. At the same time, local identity harbours emotional and symbolic meanings people ascribe to a sense of self and attachment to place.

This special issue starts from a relational, dynamic, and participatory notion of territorial identity. Therefore, it will host the results of original empirical and theoretical scientific research on territorial identity and its representations as constructed through discourses and practices.

We welcome contributions on the following topics of interest, but not limited to these:

- Representations of territorial identity and development: discourses, images, practices
- Heritage management
- Perceptions of territorial identity at various levels
- Constructing, preserving and promoting territorial identities
- Place/regional attachment in time
- (Re)defining place meaning and topophilia
- Territorial identity and territorial planning

- Territorial identity and public policy
 - Territorial identity and formal and informal education
 - Theoretical contributions for the study of territorial identity within the discourse of Cultural Geography
 - Research methodology for the study of territorial identity
